1. In December 1953, 420 families on Wilson Street, Bucharest, were required to move from their homes within a period of 48 hours. The homes were taken over by Rumanian workers and Russians. The workers were reluctant to move in after a mother had jumped from a window with her two children and the authorities were required to use force upon them.
2. In order to prevent threatened demonstrations of the people whose dissatisfaction was evident, the Rumanian Government authorities recalled the measures of appeasement they had taken in October 1953 and put into effect the following old measures:
  - a. Ex-bourgeois, who had been set free from different camps, have been rearrested for unstated reasons.
  - b. All correspondents get their letters from the police station where they are required to read their letters to the police giving explanations to any questions asked.
  - c. People who had filed statements regarding bank deposits abroad were required to bring the money back to Rumania within three months.
3. Many Rumanians were reported to have escaped into Yugoslavia while the Danube River was frozen over. The Rumanian Government plans to request that the Yugoslav Government return them to Rumania as embezzlers of public money and not as political refugees.
